People are like roses. We begin as tiny buds trying to reach out and grasp our surroundings. We rippen with each passing day. We pull our surroundings into ourselves and then bloom to show the world what beauty it has created. One day when we have reached our destination, the full rose, we tryed to show the rest of the garden how it was done, helping them to bloom. With each passing day, we grow, not only in knowledge, but also in age. When the day comes for the rose to leave it's garden, it leaves, not as an ugly dead flower, but as a memory of a beautifully bloomed rose who helped the rest of the garden become a lovely place to be.

A last assembly !

Susan,

you have really been a great friend. Even though we had our ups and downs, we have stayed good friends. And I'm glad there were more ups than there were downs. In a way I am glad things ended up as they did. I was afraid some one would ruin our friendship. But they haven't. I know I'm not the easiest person to get along with. And so I know it has taken a lot out of you to try to understand me. I hope you understand what I just said because I'm not even sure I did!!! Well looks like I've taken up to much space already, so I'll give someone else a chance to write something and close up. Stay as sweet as you are Susan. Because I really like you like you are. You will always be with me in my hopes and dreams! See ya next year. Lotsa love!

Dan

Susan,
el's been a fun
